

sweating as if having a sauna because the air conditioner of my car was not functioning; moreover it's a hot day. I glanced at the hen after 10 mins, her chest showed a slight reaction. I kept doing the adjustment for another 20 mins, her chest (heart) was beating slowly and breathing very softly, a thin reddish discharge came out from the mouth.

After 30 mins, chest-beat was faster. Then, 40 min I noticed her chest-beat was even faster, and the eyes were partially opened and she was trying to hold her head up, it's unbelievable! After 50 mins of adjustment, the chest-beat was at the normal rate; her eyes were opened, holding her head upright and look around. I can hear the throat was rattling, so I moved my right hand to chakra 5 (at the back of neck). After the 60 mins, she was breathing nicely, it's amazing!

I wondered why she was squatting. So I lifted her legs to check, I found that her left leg was limped. Probably it was hurt. I then moved my right hand to the leg. After 90 mins, although I was sweating as if having a shower, but there was no new development. I peeped at my watch; time was running short as I have to rush for the Longevity Elementary and Intermediate Course at Klang. Thus, I did "swing stroke" to the hen to end the adjustment section up. When I just swung once, she "swung" too. She leapt to her right foot and run to the left door of the car. Wow! I was at great shock for another time. She squatted there for a moment, so I opened the left door, got her out from my car to the roadside and waved goodbye.
